

I would like to fervently request that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen in any way Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. My husband and I own a large farming operation, and we both are extremely busy. Before Indiana inacted our law, the phone calls from telephone solicitors were a nightmare. We had no peace at all. It has been such a blessed relief to not have to continually deal with them. I have never, ever responded to such solicitations, nor do I plan to do so. They are a total waste of my time, and I thoroughly resent them. I cannot let the machine get our calls, because we get business calls at our home that I must deal with. Even if we did not use our phone for business, I would still consider those calls, of any kind and any nature, a terrible intrusion into our lives. Please do not undermine a very good thing that we have going here.

Sincerely,
Janalie Robeson
